Threat Assessment and Management

Mike Hodges is a healthcare security practitioner and executive leader with over 20 years of security experience. Mike serves as the Vice President of Public Safety for Piedmont Healthcare. In this role, Mike oversees the security and emergency management functions for the largest healthcare provider in the state of Georgia, with responsibility for protecting 22 hospitals, over 35,000 employees, and billions of dollars in assets. Mike holds a master's degree in executive leadership, is a Certified Healthcare Protection Administrator through the International Association for Healthcare Safety and Security (IAHSS) and is a Certified Protection Professional through ASIS. Throughout Mike's career, he has served in virtually every role in a security program, from frontline officer to executive leadership. Additionally, Mike is highly involved in developing the healthcare security and emergency management professions through his work with IAHSS. In his work with IAHSS, Mike has supported the development of the organization's Workplace Violence Certificate program, led the team that developed the IAHSS Threat Assessment and Management in Healthcare training program, served on the Governance Council, and currently Chairs the IAHSS Education Council. In addition to his professional work, Mike has co-hosted the Proactive Security Podcast and the Proactive Security Blog, which promote adopting proactive security practices across the healthcare industry.
